

Ms. Tabitha Grace Mallory

Ph.D. Candidate, China Studies Johns Hopkins SAIS

Tabitha Mallory is a Ph.D. candidate in China Studies at the Johns Hopkins University School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS). With an interest in China's role in international governance, her dissertation examines the political economy and security implications of China's international fishing industry. She also conducts research on China-Africa relations, with a focus on the environmental aspects of that relationship, and has led research delegations to both China and Africa. Ms. Mallory served for a number of years as a research associate at The National Bureau of Asian Research, an organization dedicated to informing and strengthening U.S. policy toward Asia. In 2010–11, she was a visiting scholar at Peking University's School of International Studies. Ms. Mallory holds an M.A. in China Studies and international economics from SAIS; a certificate from the Hopkins-Nanjing Center; and a B.A. in international studies and Mandarin Chinese from the University of Washington in Seattle. She speaks Chinese, Spanish, and Norwegian.
