

Dr. Mary Lovely

Professor of Economics, Syracuse University Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs
Senior Fellow, Peterson Institute for International Economics

Mary E. Lovely, senior fellow at the Peterson Institute, is professor of economics and Melvin A. Eggers Faculty Scholar at Syracuse University's Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs. Her research combines interests in international trade, multinational supply chains and China's development. During 2011–15, she served as coeditor of the China Economic Review. Her current research projects include an investigation of how the presence of multinational supply chains influenced the response of US imports to tariffs on Chinese exports and a study of the effect of China's foreign direct investment policies on trade flows.

Her recent work includes research on how foreign acquisition affects firm productivity in China, the relationship between proximity to export markets and cross-city wage variation, and the influence of Chinese tariff reductions on labor shares of value in its manufacturing firms. She recently completed studies of American manufacturing employment and outsourcing to low-income countries, the role of intellectual returnees in the success of China's photovoltaic solar industry, and the structure of Chinese reforms of state-owned enterprises. Lovely earned her PhD in economics at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor and a master's degree in city and regional planning from Harvard University.

Dr. Lovely previously testified before the Commission at its 2019 hearing on "Risks, Rewards, and Results: U.S. Companies in China and Chinese Companies in the United States."
