

Caitlin Talmadge, Ph.D.

Associate Professor, Georgetown University School of Foreign Service

Caitlin Talmadge is Associate Professor of Security Studies in the School of Foreign Service at Georgetown University, as well as Senior Non-Resident Fellow in Foreign Policy at the Brookings Institution.

Professor Talmadge's research and teaching focus on defense policy, civil-military relations, U.S. military operations and strategy, deterrence and escalation, and security issues in Asia and the Persian Gulf. She is author of the award-winning book, The Dictator's Army: Battlefield Effectiveness in Authoritarian Regimes (Cornell, 2015), and co-author of U.S. Defense Politics: The Origins of Security Policy (Routledge, 2021), now in its fourth edition. Dr. Talmadge is currently writing a book on the role of nuclear escalation risk in world politics. She is also in the final stages of a two-year study examining the strategic military implications of potential Chinese control of Taiwan.

Dr. Talmadge is a graduate of Harvard (A.B., Government, summa cum laude) and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (Ph.D., Political Science). She is a Term Member of the Council on Foreign Relations and a Research Affiliate in the MIT Security Studies Program. Her work has received funding from the Department of Defense, the Carnegie Corporation, the Smith Richardson Foundation, and the Stanton Foundation, among others. Previously, she worked as a researcher at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, a consultant to the Office of Net Assessment at the U.S. Department of Defense, and a professor at the George Washington University.

Dr. Talmadge has not previously testified before the Commission.