

David Bulman

Jill McGovern and Steven Muller Assistant Professor of China Studies and International Affairs, Johns Hopkins University School of Advanced International Studies

David J. Bulman is the Jill McGovern and Steven Muller Assistant Professor of China Studies and International Affairs at the Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies (SAIS), where he is also U.S. Director of the Pacific Community Initiative. His research looks at economic and political development in China and the implications for US-China relations. His first book, Incentivized Development in China: Leaders, Governance, and Growth in China's Counties, published by Cambridge University Press in 2016, examined the political foundations of local economic growth in China, focusing on the institutional and economic roles of county-level leaders and the career incentives that shape their behavior. Current research projects further analyze central-local relations and local economic policy implementation in the Xi Jinping era and the global implications of China's efforts to create a state capitalist welfare state.

Previously, Bulman was an Economist at the World Bank and a China Public Policy Postdoctoral Fellow at Harvard Kennedy School's Ash Center for Democratic Governance and Innovation. He is a 2021-2022 Woodrow Wilson Center China Fellow and was previously a visiting scholar at the Hopkins-Nanjing Center and a University of Chicago and Ford Foundation New Generation China Scholar. Bulman received his MA and PhD in China Studies from Johns Hopkins SAIS and his BA in Economics from Columbia University.

Dr. Bulman has not previously testified before the Commission.