

Dr. Roselyn Hsueh, Assistant Professor, Temple University

Professor Hsueh is Assistant Professor of Political Science at Temple University in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. She recently served as residential research faculty fellow at the Institute of East Asian Studies at U.C. Berkeley and visiting scholar at the Center for the Study of Law & Society at U.C. Berkeley School of Law. Prior to arriving at Temple, Professor Hsueh served as a post-doctoral fellow at the University of Southern California's Center for International Studies, and conducted research in China, Hong Kong, and Taiwan as a Fulbright Scholar at the Institute of World Economics and Politics in the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences.

Professor Hsueh's current research include a book manuscript under completion, which investigates the mediating role of market governance in the relationship between global economic integration and development outcomes in China, India, and Russia. She has conducted in-depth fieldwork in these countries for this book. Her other research projects analyze China's political economic engagement in Africa; the politics of trade policy and the political economy of identity in post-developmental state East Asia; and the relationship between economic and social control in China.

In 2015, she published an article titled, "State Capitalism, Chinese-Style: Strategic Value of Sectors, Sectoral Characteristics, and Globalization," which examines patterns of market governance across different sectors of varying strategic importance. Her 2011 book, China's Regulatory State: A New Strategy for Globalization, examines the politics of market reform and evolving government-business relations across industries in post-Mao China. Her research has been published in scholarly journals such as Comparative Political Studies and Governance. The Economist, Foreign Affairs, The Huffington Post, National Public Radio (NPR), The Washington Post, and Inside Higher Ed have featured her research.

Professor Hsueh testified before the U.S.-China Economic and Security Review Commission in 2012.
