

Dr. Jeanne Wilson

Shelby Cullom Davis Professor of Russian Studies, Chair, Political Science Department, Wheaton College; Research Associate, Davis Center for Russian and Eurasian Studies, Harvard University

Jeanne L. Wilson is the Shelby Cullom Davis Professor of Russian and Studies and a Professor of Political Science at Wheaton College in Norton, MA. She is also a research associate at the Davis Center for Russian and Eurasian Studies at Harvard University. She has a PhD in political science from Indiana University. Her research interests focus on comparing Russian and Chinese foreign policy both with respect to their efforts to construct a national identity and their status as relative outliers in the international. Her recent publications include articles in International Politics, Problems of Post-Communism, European Politics and Society, Politics, and Europe-Asia Studies dealing with the topics of soft power, cultural statecraft and the Eurasian Economic Union and China's Silk Road projects. Currently, she is involved in a collaborative project that compares Russia and China's search for status in the international system.

Dr. Wilson has not previously testified before the Commission.