

Mary C. FitzGerald

Research Fellow

Hudson Institute, Washington, D.C. Headquarters

Since 1989, Mary C. FitzGerald has served as a Research Fellow in Sino-Russian military affairs at the Hudson Institute. She has long analyzed Soviet/Russian and Chinese military writings for the DOD to define the revolutionary impact of emerging technologies on their military doctrine, strategy, operational concepts, organizational structures, and defense industry imperatives.

FitzGerald has served as consultant to the White House Office of Science and Technology Policy, the Defense Science Board, various Congressional committees, the EMP Commission, and various intelligence agencies. In 1993, the Chief of U.S. Army Intelligence awarded her a civilian medal for her extensive briefings to the senior Army leadership on "Russian Lessons from Desert Storm." From 1994-1995, she served as Adjunct Professor at the Air Command and Staff College, where she lectured extensively on Russian aerospace theory and practice. In 1997, she testified before the House National Security Committee on "The Russian Shift Toward Nuclear War-Waging."

FitzGerald has completed cutting-edge studies for the DOD, which include: Russian Views on Electronic and Information Warfare; Impact of the RMA on Russian Military Affairs; Russia-China Convergence/Divergence on 21st-Century Warfare; Sino-Russian Strategies for Fighting Future Wars; and Challenging U.S. Space Superiority: The Sino-Russian Way of the RMA.

She has contributed to numerous books and is the author of three monographs: Soviet Views on SDI (1987), Changing Soviet Doctrine on Nuclear War (1989), and The New Revolution in Russian Military Affairs (1994). She contributed a pivotal chapter--entitled "China's Evolving Military Juggernaut"--to Hudson's 2005 book: China's New Great Leap Forward: High Technology and Military Power in the Next Half-Century.

FitzGerald has published seminal articles on Russian and Chinese military topics in Strategic Review, ORBIS, Comparative Strategy, Defense Analysis, International Defense Review, The RUSI Journal, Naval War College Review, Airpower Journal, Air Force Magazine, Arms Control Today, Studies in Comparative Communism, Armed Forces Journal, Defense News, The Wall Street Journal (Europe), and The Christian Science Monitor.

From 1980-1988, FitzGerald served as a Research Analyst of Soviet military affairs at the Center for Naval Analyses, where she published her pioneering studies on Marshal Ogarkov and the new Revolution in Military Affairs (RMA).